

Plan for Socratic Seminar about the philosophers's football mach

Pre-seminar

This part will be same as every Socratic Seminar include personal and general's goal

Socratic seminar

Opening question:

If it is possible that philosophers constitute a real philosophical team to seek truth as players in a football team? If yes, why? If no, why?

Textual analysis/core questions:

- What can we know about the essence of philosophizing from watching this short video?
- Are the essence of philosophizing is personally or collectively? What about of essence of seek for truth?
- What are the similarities and differences between reach to a goal (achievement and not achievement) in a football game and philosophizing?
- Do you think the goal for Greek Team was a joy (fake) or it can be real?
- If we can consider a philosophical school (idealism, realism, pragmatism and ...) as a game team?
- Why we see so strange differences between philosophers despite all of them, claims are going to seek virtue and truth?
- If you will be a coach, who philosophers you will select to constitute a football team? Why? How will you persuade them?

Potential Socratic/evaluative questions:

- What do you think about logical presuppositions of a union? Can you explain them with focus of a football game?
- Is human society could be considered as a football team?
- If yes, what do think about conflict between authenticity and role player as player?
- To be human being is to be single one or to relate with another person?

Post-seminar

Evaluation: